The tale of the two maps.
Or Reading the World Through the Environmental Humanities

Marco Armiero
Environmental Humanities Laboratory
KTH Royal Institute of Technology
Sweden
ENVIRONMENTAL HUMANITIES LABORATORY

UNDISCIPLINING THE HUMANITIES SINCE 2011.
NATURALLY!
"I'm afraid the building next door might be undermining your foundations."

The University President's Office? Sure, go towards the Macdonald Nutritional Science Building, past the Advanced Sustainable Agriculture Department, down to the wooded Martin World Peace Hall, then right at the Enron School of Business Ethics, and you'll see it there! Doctor Paul's Office, you can't miss it!
Environmental Humanities as action research?

The environmental humanities are the traditional conjoined in new interdisciplinary formations to address the environmental crisis currently engulfing us – its antecedents, current forms and future trajectories and possible responses to it.

The EH are inherent interdisciplinary allowing researchers to go beyond the narrow borders of disciplines and think in terms of societal problems and research questions rather than disciplinary belongings.

The EH have a crucial role in addressing the anthropogenic factors contributing to increasingly extreme weather-related events.

Owain Jones, Bath Spa University

Joni Adamson, HfE Mellon Observatory

Rob Nixon, Princeton University